

Tribology and Surface Science Branch (RST)

Conducts research in support of NASA's aeronautics and space missions in the primary areas of tribology, computational materials, oil- free turbomachinery, space systems lubrication and surface analytical sciences. Major emphasis is placed on extreme environmental conditions characteristic of aerospace technology. Examples include systems operating in vacuum, at high temperature, and/or at high speed in both reducing and oxidizing environments.

